Gardner, Chinese Traditional Historiography (Harvard University Press, 1938).

Some of the new terms in the Chinese language are in Evan Morgan, Chinese New Terms (Shanghai, 1926). A brief account of the movement to write in the pal hua by the one who is credited with having more influence in initiating it than any other is Hu Shih, The Literary Renaissance (in Sophia H. Chen Zen, editor, Symposium on Chinese Culture, Shanghai, 1931). There is an account of changes in the theatre in George Kin Leung, Hsin Ch'ao (The New Tide). New Trends in the Traditional Chinese Drama (Pacific Affairs, 1929, pp. 175-183). A popular description of some of the attempts to find a simpler way of writing Chinese than the traditional characters is C. C. Wang, A Roman Alphabet for Modern China (Asia, June, 1930, pp. 437-439, 459-464).

A good deal has been written on modern education in China. P. W. Kuo, The Chinese System of Public Education (New York, 1915) tells of the earlier years of the changes. So, too, for education for girls, does Ida Belle Lewis, The Education of Girls in China (New York, 1919). A somewhat later account of women's education is Lin Paotchin, Ulnstruction Flminine en Chine (Aprbs la Revolution de 1911) (Paris, 1926). D. H. Kulp, Country Life in South China (New York, 1925) has a chapter on education valuable for its description of a particular community. Paul Monroe, the distinguished American educator who has been an adviser of the Chinese authorities, has a chapter on modern education and the student movement in his China, A Nation in Evolution (New York, 1928). There is also a summary in one chapter of H. A. Van Dorn, Twenty Years of the Chinese Republic (New York, 1932). King Chu has a chapter on education in Zen, Symposium on Chinese Culture (Shanghai, 1931). The various issues of The China Mission Year Book (beginning with 1926 The China Christian Year Book) and The China Year Book usually contain summaries of education and often statements about the New Tide Movement. Bulletins on Chinese Education, 1923

(Shanghai, 1923) contains a number of informing papers. Educational Review, a quarterly published in Shanghai by the China Christian Educational Association, contains information on secular as well as Christian education. Christian Education in China (Shanghai, 1922) is the report of an important educational commission and is very comprehensive. C. H. Peake, Nationalism and Education in Modern China (New York, 1932) is partly a brief historical account of educational changes since 1860 and partly a summary of the nationalistic program of that education. See also The Reorganization of Education in China, by the League of Nations Mission of Educational Experts (Paris, 1932), a volume which has been commented on unfavorably by several reviewers.
